

BUZZ ALDRIN VISITS JOHN CALICCHIO AT COMPUTER SHOW

Here's a funny story for you. In 1988, my friend Tony French was helping me man my Data Business Systems booth at the Comdex Computer show in Las Vegas. We were showcasing new computer products that I had developed over the past several years; KeyboardPC (complete computer built in a keyboard) and the Invader286 (a computer on a card which allowed up to 120 workstations connected while sharing files). Well, one afternoon toward the end of the grueling 5-day show, Buzz came over to our booth and sat down; seemed he was worn-out walking the "12-miles of isles". I had gone to get Tony and me something to drink and upon my return I found Buzz and Tony in deep conversation. I was introduced to Buzz when I had to say; "It's a pleasure to meet you Mr. Aldrin. By the way, did you see the movie Capricorn One?" My buddy Tony, born and raised in London England almost fell down. The movie for those of you who haven't heard of it was a story about the astronauts faking the famous landing on the moon by staging a Hollywood production. Buzz looked at me with a crooked smile. It was a priceless moment. Recently, I met the acquaintance of man who pushed the launch button for NASA on that famous mission. I told him of my story about meeting Buzz. The launch man told me that the three astronauts came back from that mission with psychological issues; seems they found glass domes on the moon. Incredible, check this out: <http://www.unexplained-mysteries.com/column.php?id=212614>
